

Call for Papers

Transformative Works and Cultures

<http://journal.transformativeworks.org/>
editor@transformativeworks.org

Editors

Kristina Busse and
Karen Hellekson

Editorial team

Rebecca Lucy Busker, Lorraine Dubuisson, Alexis Lothian, Veruska Sabucco, Mafalda Stasi, Tisha Turk, Cynthia W. Walker

Editorial advisory board

Nancy Baym, U of Kansas; Rebecca Black, UC Irvine; Will Brooker, Kingston U; Rhiannon Bury, Athabasca U; Wendy Chun, Brown U; Melissa Click, U of Missouri; Abigail De Kosnik, UC Berkeley; Paul Draper, Queensland Conservatorium Griffith U; Catherine Driscoll, U of Sydney; Kathleen Fitzpatrick, Pomona C; Sam Ford, Convergence Culture Consortium; Jonathan Gray, Fordham U; Judith Halberstam, USC; C. Lee Harrington, Miami U; Heather Hendershot, City U of New York; Matt Hills, Cardiff U; Henry Jenkins, MIT; Derek Johnson, U of Wisconsin; Roz Kaveney, Independent; Derek Kompare, Southern Methodist U; Anne Kustritz, Macalaster C; Elana Levine, U of Wisconsin, Milwaukee; Geoffrey Long, Singapore-MIT GAMBIT Game Lab; Mark McLelland, U of Wollongong; Farah Mendlesohn, Middlesex U; Helen Merrick, Curtin U of Technology; Jason Mittell, Middlebury C; Lori Morimoto, Indiana U; Roberta Pearson, U of Nottingham; Sheenagh Pugh, U of Glamorgan; Aswin Punathambekar, U of Michigan; Bob Rehak, Swarthmore C; Robin Anne Reid, Texas A&M-Commerce; Sharon Ross, Columbia C Chicago; Cornel Sandvoss, U of Surrey; Avi Santo, Old Dominion; Louisa Stein, San Diego State U; Catherine Tosenberger, U of Winnipeg

Transformative Works and Cultures (TWC) is an international peer-reviewed online journal published by the Organization for Transformative Works. TWC aims to provide a publishing outlet that welcomes fan-related topics and to promote dialogue between the academic community and the fan community. TWC accepts electronic submission of full essays through its Web site, where full guidelines are available.

TWC publishes articles about popular media, fan communities, and transformative works, broadly conceived. We invite papers on all related topics, including but not limited to fan fiction, fan vids, mashups, machinima, film, TV, anime, comic books, video games, and any and all aspects of the communities of practice that surround them.

TWC is a dream come true—an exciting chance to consolidate this field and, at the same time, bridge the gap between fans and fan scholars.
—Henry Jenkins

We encourage innovative works that situate these topics within contemporary culture via a variety of critical approaches, including but not limited to feminism, queer theory, critical race studies, political economy, ethnography, reception theory, literary criticism, film studies, and media studies:

Theory: These often interdisciplinary essays with a conceptual focus and a theoretical frame offer expansive interventions in the field of fan studies. Peer review. Length, 5,000–8,000 words plus a 100–250-word abstract.

Praxis: These essays may apply a specific theory to a formation or artifact; explicate fan practice; perform a detailed reading of a specific text; or otherwise relate transformative phenomena to social, literary, technological, and/or historical frameworks. Peer review. Length, 4,000–7,000 words plus a 100–250-word abstract.

TWC goes beyond the usual journal form and content. Bringing the passions of the fan into critical conversation with cultural theory, TWC promises to be an exciting new venue for queer and feminist work on popular culture.
—Judith Halberstam

Symposium: Symposium is a section of concise, thematically contained essays. These short pieces provide insight into current developments and debates surrounding any topic related to fandom or transformative media and cultures. Editorial review. Length, 1,500–2,500 words.

Review: Reviews offer critical summaries of items of interest in the fields of fan and media studies, including books, new journals, and Web sites. Reviews describe, assess, and evaluate. Editorial review. Length, 1,500–2,500 words.